Information

Description:

There are many variations of Lamia, but all have the basic concept: The top half is of a young woman, usually topless or with clothing protecting enough to be modest, while the bottom half is that of a slithering snake. Lamiae were feared by families in the past, as Lamiae would feast on children, as their name means 'child-devourer'. In recent ages, Lamiae feed on any flesh they can find, and nowadays charm men of humanoid races similar to the upper portion of their own bodies to mate with them to increase the Lamiae population. Then, like a Black Arachne, they will feast on the man, while he is still alive. There have been only a select few cases where a Lamia doesn't eat the man due to feelings for him. Such cases are expelled from Lamia society.

Combat Tactics:

Lamiae are usually solitay, but have been known to attack in parties of at most five. They have variable combat tactics, but will usually first attempt to charm or manipulate at least twio to three members of the enemy party. Afterwards, They have the enemy fight for them. while other lamiae assist in battle. Once they have killed off half the party, they will turn against their enemy and attempt to kill their and their charmed enemies, off
